ALCOHOL AND DIGESTION .- To me it is a marvel of marvels that a thoughtful man, one of intelligence, knowing the nature of alcohol and its effects on the stomach and its functions, should ever recommend the use of intoxicants for weak digestion. While it is a fact that alcohol coagulates animal albumen, precipitating it in worthless flakes, and that it renders the pepsin in the gastric juice inert, or of necessity impairing this juice, one of the most active components of which is this pepsin, its effect on digestion must be manifest. Now, since so much of our food is albuminous-particularly that given to the sick-it is down-right cruelty to order these stimulants to the sick; they well may bear this treatment for a time, but the sick should be spared. The egg, so useful to the sick-especially when simply "beaten up" with milk—is worth-less when coagulated with alcohol; bad enough when this is done by heat. The same remark applies, also, to our meats. rich in albumen, with still other sub-stances, though "e vegetable albumen is not affected so much by the heat. Common sense, science and facts are opposed to the use of intoxicants, in sickness and health alike. The world would be helped beyond our powers of infallible tests: 1. The first taste of every poison is either insipid or repulsive 2. The persistent obtrusion of the moxious substance changes that aversion into a specific eraving. 3. The more or less pleasurable excitement produced by a gratification of that craving is always followed by a depressing reaction. The first drop of a whole-some beverage (milk, cold water, cider fresh from the press, etc.) is as pleasant as the last; the indulgence of such pleasures is not followed by repentance, and never begets a specific craving. Pau-cakes and honey we may eat with great relish whenever we can get them, but it we can't, we won't miss them as long as we can satisfy our hunger with bread and butter. In mid-winter, when apples advance to six dollars a barrel, it needs no lectures and midnight prayer to substitute rice-pudding for apple-pie. A Turk may breakfast for thirty years on figs and roasted chestnuts, and yet be quite as comfortable in Switzerland, where they treat him to milk and bread. Not so the dram-drinker; his "thirst" cannot be assuaged with water or milk, his enslaved appetite craves the wanted tipple-or else a stronger stimulant. Natural food has no effect on the poison-hunger; Nature has nothing to do with such appetites .- Health and Home.

Characteristics of Smokers.

A gentleman who is a great "fumigator" says that he has philosophized about smokers, with the result: "An even-tempered, quiet man never goes to an extreme in choosing his cigar. A nervous man wants something strong and furious; a mild man something that smokes, and nothing more, There is a great deal in the way men handle their cigar. If a man smokes his cigar only enough to keep it lighted, and relishes taking it from his mouth to look at the blue curl of smoke in the air, set him down as an easy-going man. He has keen preceptions and delicate sensibilities. He will not create trouble, but will be apt to see it out when once begun. Beware of the man who never releases the grip of his cigar, and is indifferent whether it burns or not. He is cool, calculating, and exacting. He is seldom energetic physically, but lives easily off those who perform the labor. The man that smokes a bit, and rests a bit, and fumbles the cigar more or less, is easily affected by circumstances. If the cigar goes out frequently, the man has whole-souled disposition, is a devil-may-care sort of a fellow, with a lively brain and a glib tongue and generally a fine fund of anecdotes. To hold half the cigar in the mouth sand generally a fine fund of anecdotes. To hold half the cigar in the mouth and smoke indifferently is a lazy man's habit. They are generally of little force and their characters are not of the highest strata, A nervous man, who fumbles his cigar a great deal, is a sort of a popinjay among men. Holding the cigar constantly between the teeth, chewing it occasionally, and not caring if it is lighted at all, are charactering if it is lighted at all

Too Much "Ytm."

Riding on the cars on one of the roads out of Chicago was a man, not yet in the prime of life, so far as years go, but who was in his old age so far as mental and physical condition is to be considered. He was what might be called a total wreck in person and in appearance. A few years ago this man was considered one of the most promising young business men in the city. He was full of getuptoitiveness, pluck, push, and energy. But he lacked the ove thing needful—caution. In an evil hour he became excited in speculation, and for a while he made money hand over fist. Everything he touched seemed to turn to money. He finally sold out his legitimate business and went into speculation exclusively. He had the finest of everything. But one day stocks began to tumble. The man knew what he was about; invested more and finally he too, with his stocks took a terrible tumble, and when he looked about he found himself a bankrupt. He was too proud to take a clerkship, but pawned his fine clothes, jewelry, etc., and took to drink. The result of all of it is that man to-day is deep down into the mire of despondency, and the friends he had in his prosperous days, those who feasted at his expense, and those whom he had helped in time of need only point their finger at him and sneeringly call him the "fool." Vim and energy is a good thing. Ambition and a desire to better one's self is an excellent trait in any man's composition, but with these traits a young man is very apt to get badly "rattled," if he lets his ambition run away with common sense or when he refuses to listen to reason. A young horse generally stands a better chance to win a hurdle race than an old one, but in its eagerness to jump the hurdle it often breaks its neck. Better be a little old and fogyish than to let reck-less youth run at will unbridled. Let well enough alone, young man, and stick to legitimate business, and you will, under ordinary circumstances, come out the winner. Young man, if you would win a fortune work and wait but work a good deal more than you wait .- Peck's Sun.

A French Surgeon.

In France surgeons like to manufacture little pleasantries to show the uncertanties of medicine, and the doctors delight in doing the same thing for surgery. The doctors are now telling the following: The victim of an explosion was pierced through and through by an iron drill. The surgeon felt his pulse. "You are wounded, sir," said he; "you have fever." I know I'm wounded," said the patient; "I've three feet of iron in mystomach." "Do these accidents often happen in your family?" "Not very often." "Have you ever had such a trouble before?" "First time I ever had it." "It must embarrass you to lie upon your back."
"Yes, sir." "And upon your stomach."
"Very much so." "You would be easier on your side." "Yes, slightly." "Very well. You have a drill through your body; two courses are open to you-leave the drill where it is and die of inflammation or extract it and bleed to death. Science will do its best, but you must choose for yourself and take the responsibility as to your life; all our patients do that."
